Winter is on the way – Are you prepared for those high heating bills?

(BEND, OR) -This year there is a better way for central Oregonians to save money on their home heating costs: Energy Efficiency.

Efficiency is the current buzzword on the national stage and Green Savers is the premier local energy efficiency upgrade company capable of achieving a home's maximum potential. The Energy Trust of Oregon is offering central Oregonians considerable financial incentives to make the necessary upgrades to their homes.

"It's a win win situation for everyone," claims Robert Hamerly, owner of Green Savers. "Our customers save money and energy and earn money back for making sensible improvements to their home, which add value to their property."

One of the best ways to stem high home heating costs and to conserve energy is to make sure that all of the systems in a residence are operating at their highest possible efficiency.

Green Savers performs several diagnostic tests to determine how effectively the home is maintaining the heating or cooling used to stay comfortable. These tests indicate how best to improve the efficiency of the home and help calculate the amount of incentives residents can expect to receive for completing the work on their homes.

In addition to home performance testing Green Savers, a licensed contractor and a trade ally of the Energy Trust of Oregon, is prepared to make the necessary upgrades on residences.

Homes of all ages can benefit from testing – owners of recently built homes should know that a 2008 change in the building code calls for sealing of the duct systems in new residential construction, which can translate to nearly 30% efficiency gains when heating and cooling the home.

Green Savers performs the work and handles all of the necessary paperwork regarding incentives and tax credits. With the rise of energy costs, now is an especially opportune time to ensure the homes in central Oregon are running as efficiently as they are able.
